Docking-Out 2001

In the first picture, the decking has already been removed from the outboard section of the dock and stacked by the sauna, and the hinge pins joining the two sections are being removed. The outboard section is then lifted by both ends, the crew on the dock walks backwards and the boat floats in. This section is then carried to shore and stored. The decking on the shore section will be removed next and then this section will be lifted and carried to shore in a similar way. In early May the process is reversed, during "docking-in".

It's a lot more difficult if the lake is rough, or if there aren't quite enough people.
